

Contents

Suggested Groupings Contents vii

Preface for Instructors xi

Introduction 1

What You'll Read 2

How to Read Critically 3

What You'll Write 6

Writing in a Time of Transition 7

The Readings

Nicholson Baker “Deadline” 9

An author attempts to save old newspapers from librarians.

Dennis Baron “From Pencils to Pixels: The Stages of Literacy Technologies” 35

An overview of historical patterns that occur when literacy technologies shift, with particular focus on the history of the pencil.

Naomi Baron “The Art and Science of Handwriting” 54

An overview of handwriting and penmanship from the eighteenth to twentieth centuries.

Sven Birkerts “Into the Electronic Millennium” 62

A dire prediction of the downfall of language and history in the digital age.

Jay David Bolter “The New Dialogue” 75

An argument that hypertext offers an associative way of thinking that resembles the structure of speech.

Jorge Luis Borges “The Library of Babel” 88

A fictional fantasy of a library that contains all that's been written.

Frederick Douglass From Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass, an American Slave 96

A former slave writes about learning to read and becoming free.

Paul Duguid and John Seely Brown “The Social Life of Documents” 104

On how information is social, too.

- Elizabeth Eisenstein “Some Features of Print Culture” 124
A scholarly study of the changes wrought by Gutenberg’s invention of the printing press.
- Peter Elbow “The Shifting Relationships between Speech and Writing” 135
A professor of composition argues that we should incorporate more speech-like elements into our writing.
- Benjamin Franklin From The Autobiography of Benjamin Franklin 156
A recipe for moral improvement through writing.
- William Gibson “Johnny Mnemonic” 162
Science fiction set in the near future.
- George Gissing From New Grub Street 176
A nineteenth-century novel about the rigors of writing novels.
- Adam Gopnik “The Return of the Word” 180
An essayist argues that e-mail and the World Wide Web are heirs to eighteenth-century prose.
- E. D. Hirsch “‘You Can Always Look It Up’—or Can You?” 183
A cultural critic worries about the decline of research and conceptual skills in the digital age.
- Homer Three versions of the Iliad 192
Variations on a brief passage.
- Steven Johnson “Links” 195
The editor of an online magazine argues that links are an underused new form of punctuation.
- George Landow “Twenty Minutes into the Future, or How are We Moving Beyond the Book?” 214
A scholarly approach to the timely question prompted by the title.
- Wendy Lesser “The Conversion” 227
A writer narrates her conversion to e-mail.
- Toby Lester “New-Alphabet Disease?” 234
A journalist discusses Azerbaijan’s shift from one alphabet to another.
- Malcolm X From Autobiography of Malcolm X 242
An account of reading and writing as social and political liberation.
- Alberto Manguel “The Shape of the Book” 246
A survey of changes in the sizes and shapes of books as well as of the changing role of books in culture.
- Herman Melville “Bartleby, the Scrivener: A Story of Wall-Street” 263
A fictional story about a copyist in nineteenth-century America.

- Melanie Stewart Millar “Filling the Void: Building the Hypermacho Man” 290
A feminist look at Wired magazine.
- Janet H. Murray Selections from Hamlet on the Holodeck: The Future of Narrative in Cyberspace 308
A literary critic and software designer imagines possibilities for hypertext narrative.
- Walter Ong “Writing is a Technology that Restructures Thought” 315
An overview on the conceptual shifts that occur with new writing technologies, originally delivered as a lecture.
- On Women and Reading Three Paintings 338
A collection of three paintings from the eighteenth- and nineteenth-centuries that represent women reading or being read to.
- Alex Soojung-Kim Pang “The Work of the Encyclopedia in an Age of Electronic Reproduction” 343
An editor examines online encyclopedias.
- Ian Parker “Absolute PowerPoint” 352
A journalist examines the widespread use of PowerPoint.
- Plato From Phaedrus 360
A dialogue in which Socrates argues speech is preferable to writing.
- Roy Porter “Reading is Bad for Your Health” 365
A humorous look at various cautions against reading throughout the ages, originally presented as a lecture.
- Reading Screens Word Processing and Web Site Screen Shots 375
Four images of computer screens presented as visual artifacts.
- Howard Rheingold “Look Who’s Talking” 379
An expert on new technologies looks at the Amish.
- Paul Roberts “Virtual Grub Street: Sorrows of a Multimedia Hack” 389
A freelance writer reports on his experiences writing for an online encyclopedia.
- James Sosnoski “Hyper-readers and their Reading Engines” 400
A professor of writing argues for a new approach to reading inspired by online prose.
- Mitchell Stephens “Complex Seeing: A New Form” 418
An academic argues that seeing is a form of reading, too.
- Sundiata Two versions of an oral tale 443
A West African oral epic.

Cass Sunstein “Fragmentation and Cybercascades” 453

A political scientist looks at the effects of the Internet on public discourse.

Johannes Trithemius From In Praise of Scribes (De Laude Scriptorum) 469

A fifteenth-century monk lauds the virtues of copying and cautions against printing.

Sherry Turkle “Virtuality and Its Discontents” 477

A sociologist studies issues of identity among MOO and MUD users.

Mark Twain “The First Writing-Machines” 500

A writer’s first experience using a typewriter.

Suggested Groupings 505

1. Ways of Writing: From Tablets to Hypertexts 509
 - Introduction 510
 - Extended Writing Projects 512
2. Composing Identity 514
 - Introduction 515
 - Extended Writing Projects 515
3. Ways of Reading: From Aloud to Onscreen 518
 - Introduction 518
 - Extended Writing Projects 519
4. Cyberculture 521
 - Introduction 521
 - Extended Writing Projects 522
5. Transitional Moments in the History of Writing 526
 - Introduction 526
 - Extended Writing Projects 528
6. The Spoken Word and the Written Word 531
 - Introduction 531
 - Extended Writing Projects 532
7. Informing the Public: Debates on Libraries, Information, and Knowledge 535
 - Introduction 535
 - Extended Writing Projects 537

Appendix: Historical Table of Contents 539

Credits 541